Mission: St. Louis Announces New Board President and Member

St. Louis, MO. - Mission: St. Louis announces the appointment of Ben Holman to serve as the new president of the Mission: St. Louis Board of Directors. The board also appointed new member, Daniel Hawthorne. The roles became effective August 1.

Holman, director of business development at Edwards Wealth Management, has been an active board member since 2018 and succeeds former Board President Mick McIntyre.

"I believe the adversity of 2020 has truly revealed the heart and soul of Mission: St. Louis and am proud to succeed Mick as board president. He has been an inspirational leader and a driving force in the development and execution of our strategic vision. I am excited to continue to serve our city alongside the outstanding members of our board, management team and staff here at Mission: St. Louis," Holman said.

Additionally, Hawthorne joined the board as a new member in August. Before this, he served as a mentor to Beyond Jobs participants for two years. Hawthorne works as an enterprise account executive at MongoDB.

Holman and Hawthorne are serving alongside 8 other board members.

About Mission: St. Louis - Mission: St. Louis is a nonprofit that is restoring the city by building relationships to empower people to transform their lives. With relationship in hand, we have made a strategic set of programs available to the people we serve. These programs work together to address critical stages in the cycle of poverty, like high school graduation + recidivism. We walk alongside people as they work their way through our programs, empowering entire families to break the cycle of poverty.
